Description
The ansible playbooks on 3.0-dev in the devel repo install a bashrc with a bunch of helpful aliases related to helping pulp developers, like the "pclean" alias that is supposed to reset your local database and content to a freshly-installed state. Some of these tasks interact with mongodb, and should be updated to interact with postgres instead.

I've started on this somewhat organically already since I've already got a working (sortof) db-reset script, so I'm adapting that for pclean, and will take a shot at the other aliases while I'm in there.

At the moment, this appears to depend on the pulp.platform path existing, so this should block on #2226.

This fix isn't complete. I've opened up #2266 to start to deal with more of the problem, but for now "ptest(s)" and "pclean" should work.
