Description

Pulp has two settings.py which duplicates the settings we need to maintain. This leads to out-of-date settings defaults where the commented value (the default is wrong). You can see the two here:

pulpcore/app/settings.py   <--- the real settings file we should keep pulpcore/etc/pulp/settings.py   <----- the regularly out of date one with nothing but comments we should delete

It's valuable to clearly show defaults to users but this file isn't the best way.

I initially added a relationship to https://pulp.plan.io/issues/3721 but the ansible installer is actually templating the whole settings file at the moment, so this change should not actually change anything for the installer afaict.
